COVID-19 update: Survey shows homeless student identification plummeting during campus closures

A national SchoolHouse Connection survey of 1,444 McKinney-Vento education liaisons in 49 states found a 28 percent drop in the identification of homeless students compared to fall 2019, amounting to an estimated 420,000 fewer children identified at the start of the 2020–21 school year. The McKinney-Vento Homeless Assistance Act requires districts to appoint a homeless education liaison and ensure homeless students have the same access to education as other learners, which includes identifying, enrolling and providing transportation for homeless students — a monumental task made more difficult as a result of the pandemic.

CSBA President Xilonin Cruz-Gonzalez shined a spotlight on the issue in a Nov. 23 column in CalMatters. California has the highest number of homeless youth in the country. More than 269,000 K-12 students are experiencing homelessness, and that number is likely to grow as families face widespread evictions. While student homelessness is a problem that cannot be solved by educational institutions alone, “schools and school boards play a pivotal role in bringing services, resources and academic support to students to improve their ability to get educated, find employment and improve their quality of life,” Cruz-Gonzalez said.

In other COVID-19 developments:

- The National Assessment of Educational Progress, also known as the Nation's Report Card, has officially been postponed for 2021 by the U.S. Department of Education. James Woodworth, Commissioner of the National Center for Education Statistics, announced the decision Nov. 25, noting that the change would allow local educational agencies struggling with the pandemic to stabilize before attempting a large-scale national assessment. - The Families First Coronavirus Response Act directed businesses with fewer than 500 employees to cover that time off at two-thirds pay. Under the law, employers can recoup those wages with a dollar-for-dollar tax write-off. This temporary federal program that has allowed parents and legal guardians to take up to 12 weeks of emergency family leave to help kids with distance learning during the COVID-19 pandemic expires at the end of 2020, leaving families who have relied on this option with few meaningful alternatives. This is likely to impact many California households, where Gov. Gavin Newsom announced Nov. 30 that 51 of 58 counties are now in “purple,” or the most restrictive tier in terms of school and business closures. Congress is facing a Dec. 11 deadline to fund the federal government and prevent a holiday shutdown, while prospects for another coronavirus relief measure have been stalemated for months.

Native American student attendance must be prioritized, as highlighted by new state data

Native American youth in California are still missing far too much school each year, according to statewide data released this month which, for the first time, included broad reasons for why students missed school in the 2017–18 and 2018–19 academic year. During the 2018–19 school year, American Indian or Alaska Native students had an absence rate of 13.6 percent, lower only than foster and homeless youth.

Knowing the reasons why children missed class time creates an opportunity for school attendance staff to collaborate and share best practices on methods to improve attendance, identifying specific actions that can help students and their families overcome attendance barriers. In Humboldt County, education officials are doing just that. According to CDE data, the average student in the county missed 12 school days in the 2018–19 year, compared to state average of 9.6 days. Native American students that year missed an average of 14.5 days. Humboldt County Superintendent Chris Hartley related this data to the county's high rate of Adverse Childhood Experiences, or ACEs, which include physical, emotional or sexual abuse; physical or emotional neglect or "household dysfunction" including parental incarceration; mental illness; substance dependence; parental separation or divorce; or intimate partner violence. IQC moves State Literacy Plan to State Board

The California Instructional Quality Commission at its November meeting approved edits and moved the comprehensive Statewide Literacy Plan forward for approval at the Jan. 13–14, 2021 meeting of the State Board of Education. Commissioner Barbara Murchison outlined the key components of the plan, as well as presenting recommended revisions based upon the nearly 350 public comments. She said that while many public comments asked for stronger guidance around literacy, universal screening and teaching foundational skills, the purpose of the document is to align already-existing guidance. “The purpose of the State Literacy Plan is to align and integrate initiatives, content standards, and all of the many state guidance documents,” said Murchison. “There is a lot of really wonderful guidance in our state around how to improve literacy, but I think people aren’t aware of all of the various resources that are available, and they also struggle to see how it all fits together.” Read more on the CSBA blog »

Temporary cash flow for districts and COEs

The California School Cash Reserve Program helps guard against temporary cash flow shortages in a safe, cost-effective way by creating an additional cash reserve to the general fund. Participants issue Tax and Revenue Anticipation Notes (TRANS) through a streamlined, pooled process that allows for low borrowing costs, flexible use and repayment process and easy, efficient administration. CSBA works with Dale Scott & Company; Piper Sandler; and Orrick Herrington & Sutcliffe to provide the Cash Reserve Program for school districts, community colleges and county offices of education. Learn more »
